

Learning goals for the course

By the end of this course you should...

- understand the historic development of archaeology
- know the distinct vocabulary of the discipline
- recognize the varieties or sub-fields of archaeology
- be able to discuss the basic theories, methods and techniques used by archaeologists in investigating, reconstructing, and preserving the past
- have acquired the basic archaeological skills used by archaeologists to investigate the material remains of the past (such as how to locate, record, investigate and analyze archaeological sites)
- understand and be able to discuss the professional values and ethics of archaeology, and its role in preserving the world archaeological record